CSR performance per domain

Key issues

The cement, plaster, ceramic and glass production processes are well-known as energy intensive and high CO2 emitters due to their requirement for very high temperature. Companies therefore need to reduce those impacts as much as possible (ENV 2.2). The Building Materials industry is highly concerned by local emissions (ENV 2.6), since extraction and production processes release dust in the atmosphere and generate noise and vibration. They have health and safety impact on people living in proximity of quarries and production sites as well as for employees working within these facilities. It is also important for companies in the sector to improve environmental performance of buildings through environmentally friendly building materials for their customers (ENV 3.1) to access new markets and attract environmentally focused customers.

Company performance

- The Company's performance in the Environment domain is weak in absolute terms and has remained stable since last review.
- The Company has set targets to reduce its atmospheric emissions and has made general references to the reduction of energy use, protection of biodiversity, protection of water resources, management of environmental impacts from the use and disposal of products. Relevant KPIs such as GHG emissions and Energy consumption have shown a positive trend during the last three years. However, the Company's reporting does not seem to address the issues of management of atmospheric emissions, local pollution, and environmental impacts from transportation.
- The Company's performance is below the sector average.

Key issues

Health and Safety (HRS 3.2) has been identified has a major issue for the Building Materials sector, with high risks at production process, especially for subcontracted employees. Workers are exposed to common physical risks in heavy industries including harmful substances (such as solvents) and to fine dust (such as crystalline silica). Together with noise, both elements (gazeous compounds and dust) may generate occupational diseases.

Company performance

- The Company's performance in the Human Resources domain is weak in absolute terms which has deteriorated since the previous review.
- The Company does not seem to publicly address the issues of responsible management of reorganisations and promotion of labour relations. Argos commits to promote career management and has set up an internal job opportunity marketplace. In addition, the Company is committed to ensure awareness about health and safety issues through training, monitoring, risk assessment, and internal audits but no H&S quantitative data seem to be disclosed.
- The Company's performance is in line with its peers.

Key issues

The increasing internationalization of building materials companies, notably in countries with sensitive labour rights at stake such as China, exposes such companies to complicity in labour rights violations (HRT2.1). Companies that exploit quarries should also take into consideration fundamental human rights related to land property and indigenous communities and put in place adequate measures (such as grievance mechanisms, compensation plans, etc). (HRT 1.1)

Company performance

- The Company's performance in the Human Rights domain is limited in absolute terms and has remained stable since last review
- The Company is committed to respect human rights and prevent discrimination as well as to freedom of association. In addition, Argos prevents discrimination such as monitoring of salary disparities. The percentage of women in management increased over the last two years.
- The Company is in line with its peers.

Key issues

The building materials sector can foster the creation/development of local businesses, and train and employ socially disadvantaged people (long-term unemployed people, young with no educational background,...). Companies with quarrying activities (and related production plants) in remote areas can contribute to social and economic development of communities through taxes but also through investments such as provision of local infrastructure, training and other support. However, new quarries and plant production opening as well as closure of production sites can lead to social and economic damages when major community development' stakes are not well identified and investments not carefully planned.

Company performance

- The Company's performance in the Community Involvement is limited in absolute terms which has deteriorated since the previous review.
- The Company is committed to promote social and economic development but no measures in place to address the issue. Argos' normalised indicator (EBIT) on social and economic development has shown improvement over the past three years. Lastly, Argos reports taxes paid in Colombia, where it has 53% of its operations.
- The Company is in line with its peers.

Key issues

The Building Materials sector is highly concentrated, notably in the cement and plaster industry. Sector consolidation has given companies more control over market conditions by reducing competition and exerting greater control over prices. It is therefore important to ensure that no monopoles and abuse of dominant positions are taking over and that all players are given equal and transparent access to markets (C&S 3.2). Besides, building materials contain substances that may be harmful during implementation or use of buildings. Therefore it is important to assess initiatives by companies to manage product safety risks (C&S 1.1).

Company performance

- The Company's performance in the Business Behaviour domain is weak in absolute terms and has remained stable since last review.
- The Company has committed to the prevention of corruption and has set up basic measures, such as a reporting system and approval procedures for gifts. Argos refers to include social factors in supply chain management but no measure seems to be in place to cover the issue. The Company does not seem to address the issues of product safety and anti-competitive practices in its reporting.
- The Company's performance is below the sector average.

Key issues

Corporate governance is critical to ensuring that a well functioning system of checks and balances protects the interests of all of the company's stakeholders. The effectiveness of the Board of Directors is a key issue to be addressed: this can be gleaned from information on Board composition (independence and competencies) and its way of functioning (regularity of Board meetings, evaluation of performance). Other important corporate governance factors include the effectiveness of the Audit and Internal control system, the protection of Shareholders Rights and the establishment of Executive Remunerations which align executives' and company's interests.

Company performance

- The Company's performance in the Corporate Governance domain is limited and has remained stable since last review.
- More than half of the Board is independent, and board members are elected at least every three years but these elections are staggered. The Company's internal controls do not appear to cover CSR risks. In terms of shareholders' rights, no restrictions have been identified. Argos seems not to be transparent on the remuneration paid to executives.
- The Company's performance is in line with its peers.

Evaluation of Board's functioning and performance

Each individual Director is evaluated on a regular basis in the middle or at the end of the period for which they were elected. The evaluation is conducted by an independent firm and a summary of the conclusions of this evaluation is submitted to the General Assembly of Shareholders at the meeting in which the election of the Board takes place.

The formal CSR reporting has been signed by CEO/Chairman/Board, but there is no evidence that relevant CSR issues are reviewed at Board meetings.
